I binded a label's property to the event, and I want to only subscribe once, but how can I do this? The label property will change from time to time. I'm using the MVVM pattern, so I have ViewModels, and Model. And my main window is a view model. So this is my code: MainWindowViewModel: public void GenerateGUI(string property1, string property2) where T : new() { RegisterForEvents(); foreach (T item in data.Get()) { item.Property1 = property1; item.Property2 = property2; } DoMainStuff(); } My MainWindowViewModel will call this method once a button is clicked. The label will get updates with the properties from the items that are in the data. MainWindowViewModel: public void RegisterForEvents() { EventManager.Events.AddHandler(LabelName.PropertyChanged, labelNamePropertyChanged); } And the event handler in the event manager: static void labelNamePropertyChanged(object sender, PropertyChangedEventArgs e) { var label = sender as Label; ... } A: Typically if you want to hook up to an event in one particular place, it would be ok to reference whatever is holding that event inside that class. If you keep your classes loosely coupled, it can be much easier to deal with things like this. If you have an object that has the event you are looking for, then where you put that object will determine when it fires.

Blackledge swerved, hit the boy, ran over him and then stopped. The boy was dead, his body covered with what his father called "blood, hair and brain matter." In his first interview about the slaying, Blackledge told the Kansas City Star he shook the boy's hand, apologized and told him he was just going for help. "I'm not a monster," Blackledge told the newspaper. "I did what I did because I'm human. I did what any human would have done." Blackledge told police he thought the boy had grabbed his left car door, but he never saw the boy. Blackledge, 55, was charged with second-degree murder and reckless endangerment. Blackledge spent a night in jail before posting $50,000 bond. His first court hearing is set for Thursday morning. The boy was walking with his mother and stepfather to their vehicle when he was struck. A neighbor heard the crash and found the boy lying on the ground. The boy's father was upset after reading the Star's story, saying the family was focused on mourning the boy's death. The teen moved to Kansas after his parents divorced, according to his father. The boy had been in the Kansas City area for just under six months. Blackledge is a retired fire engineer who worked in Kansas City for 32 years and was an assistant fire chief for Kansas City, Mo., for 12 years.
